This early 20th-century stool from China's Shanxi province charms with its simple design and fantastic surface texture. The stool's unusual bowed leg form celebrates the twists and bends of the northern elmwood timber and lends the piece an uncanny animated quality. With its spirited form, it's not hard to imagine this stool springing to life. Beautifully worn with time and use, the wood's expressive grain is on full display, marked by knots and splits adding rustic character. Once used as a chopping block, this provincial stool lives on as a versatile addition to the modern home.
